

I am oppose to allowing the FCC to force the State of Wisconsin to follow only the Federal Do-Not-Call rules only. It is very annoying to have someone call you during the evening particularly when the telemarketer does not let you say anything until they finish their speech. I would not have a problem to allow Federal rules to supercede State rules if the Federal rule has a provision that if you tell the company that you do not want to be bother by them then they must send that to all their affiliates as well so the consumer does not have to do it each time the company's affiliates call.
